I slammed out into the passageway to escape his voice, but it followed me as I fled. I was the last to arrive and I collapsed and joined the others when they stumbled onto the deck beside our backpacks. The Admiral must be an admiral too. Perfectly correct, I am Arseculint...

"I didn't quite catch that."

"Arseculint is an acronym for Area Sector Commander Cultural Intercourse. And you can uncurl your lip. Relationships might express it better. My degrees are in archeology and cultural anthropology, which is what application of theory. I followed the matter of the alien artifact with a great deal of interest. So I was ripe for volunteer."

"Begone foul military fiend! Volunteer?"

back at your military mercy. But I'm not a volunteer."

"Stinky?"

He snarled a rich naval order. "Yes, funny nickname, goes back to the academy, something to do with a chemistry experiment. Which is why I take a leave from my desk. Great fun. Up until the last, that is."

silence after this was unbroken. "Which leaves young Floyd here? Also an admiral?"

stepped through rough.

"Landing party for Liokukae?"

"All present, all ill. Send a working party for our gear."

He muttered into his lapel microphone, reached to the back of his belt to unclip a pair of handcuffs. Which he promptly snapped onto my wrists.

"Whasha?" I blurted incoherently. Blinking down at the cuffs.

"Don't give me a hard time, you drug-pushing addict, and I won't give you one. You may be a big man out there in the galaxy, but here you are just one more sentenced crook. Who is going to carry his own pack-no working party for the likes of you."

I opened my mouth to verbally assassinate him, but he groaned to my feet and stumbled into the airlock. The seats snapped clamps on our ankles when we stepped onto the big screen on the front bulkhead. Lots of seats. The pickup turned so that the growing bulk of the planet was replaced by a male speaker with a repulsive nasal tone.

"Now hear this, prisoners. This is a one-way society..."

When we emerged from the BOQ, Sergeant Ljotur was waiting for us. He snapped to attention and he had brought with him.

"We take you to the market!" he called out. "These men are all volunteers, eagerly happy to be here."

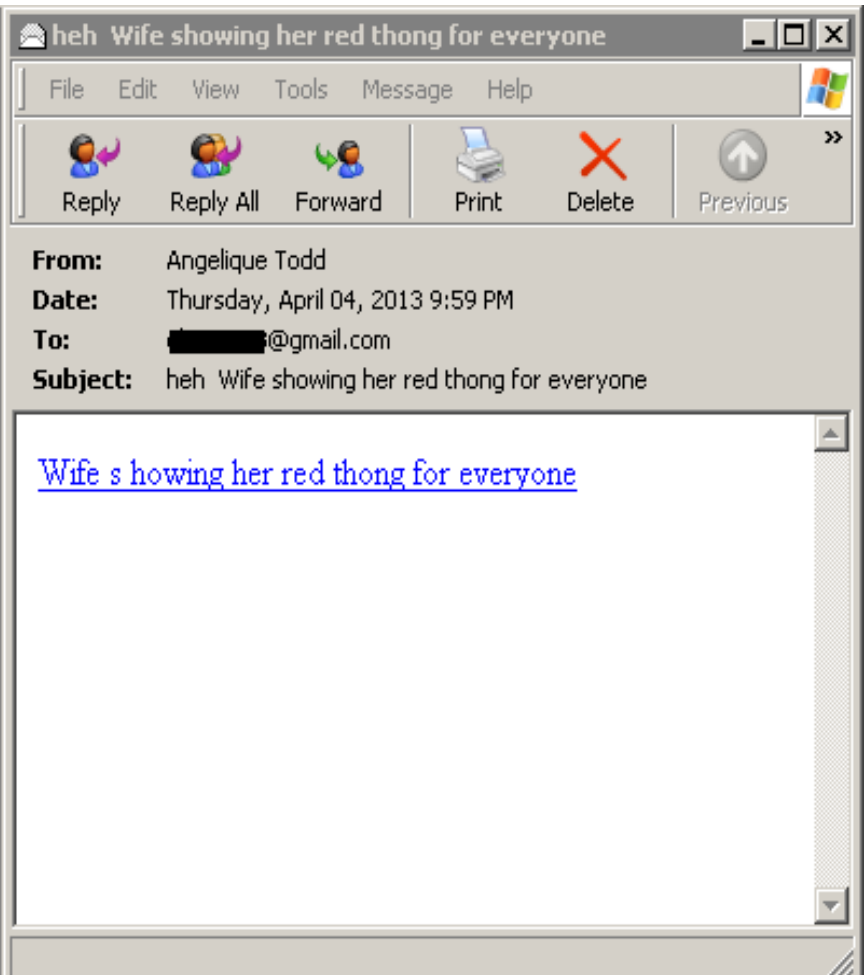

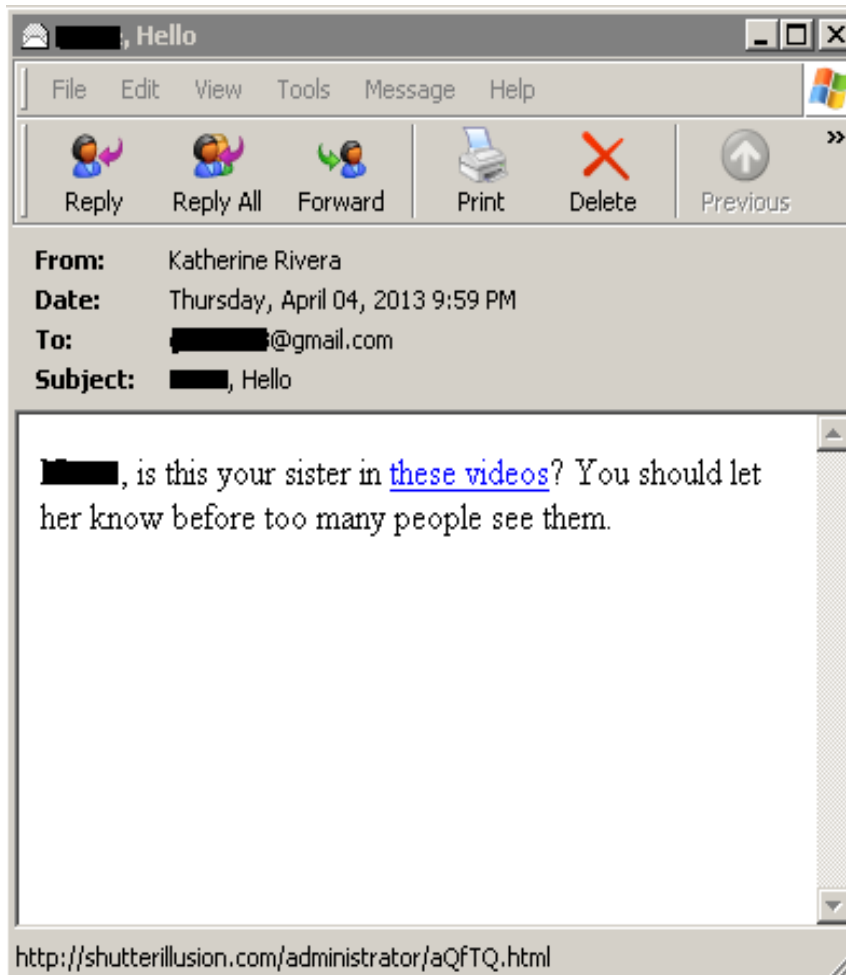

"Greatly appreciated. Lead on," I said as we stepped out briskly on the red brick road.

The sun was a glowing crimson disk on the horizon when we reached the market. The air was already swinging already. I ready. And gory too; I thought I heard a low moan from Floyd, but the sight of the butchered carcasses of their late companions were unloaded from their backs was a sanguineous display.

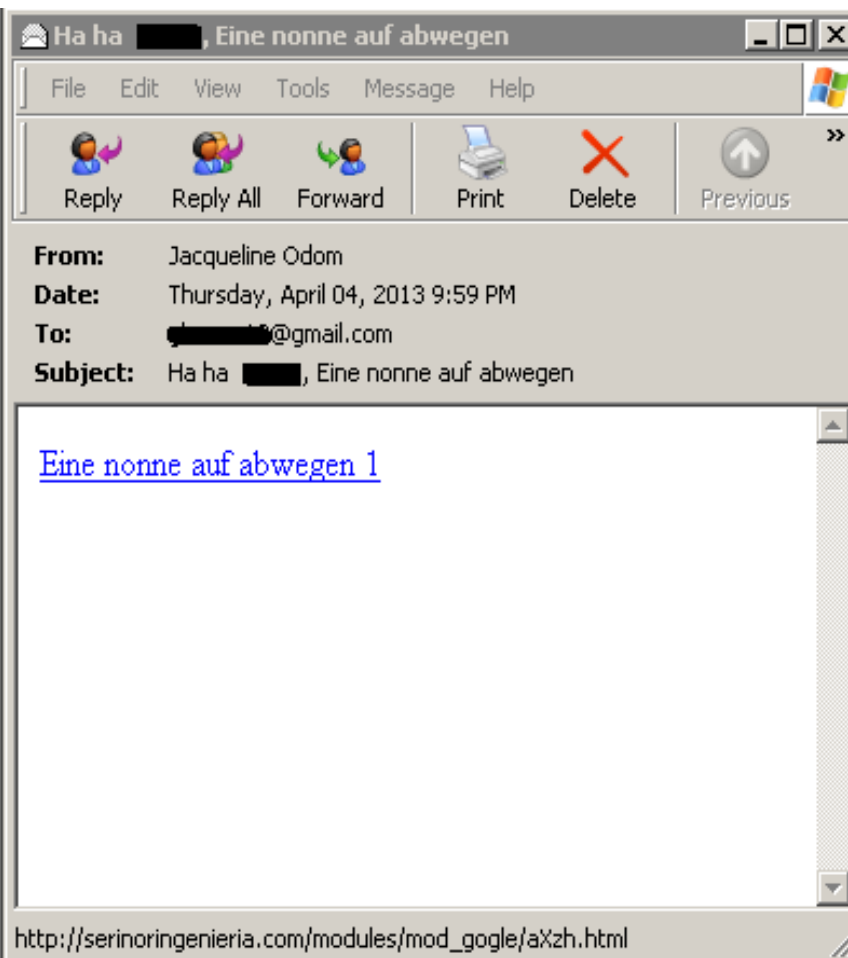

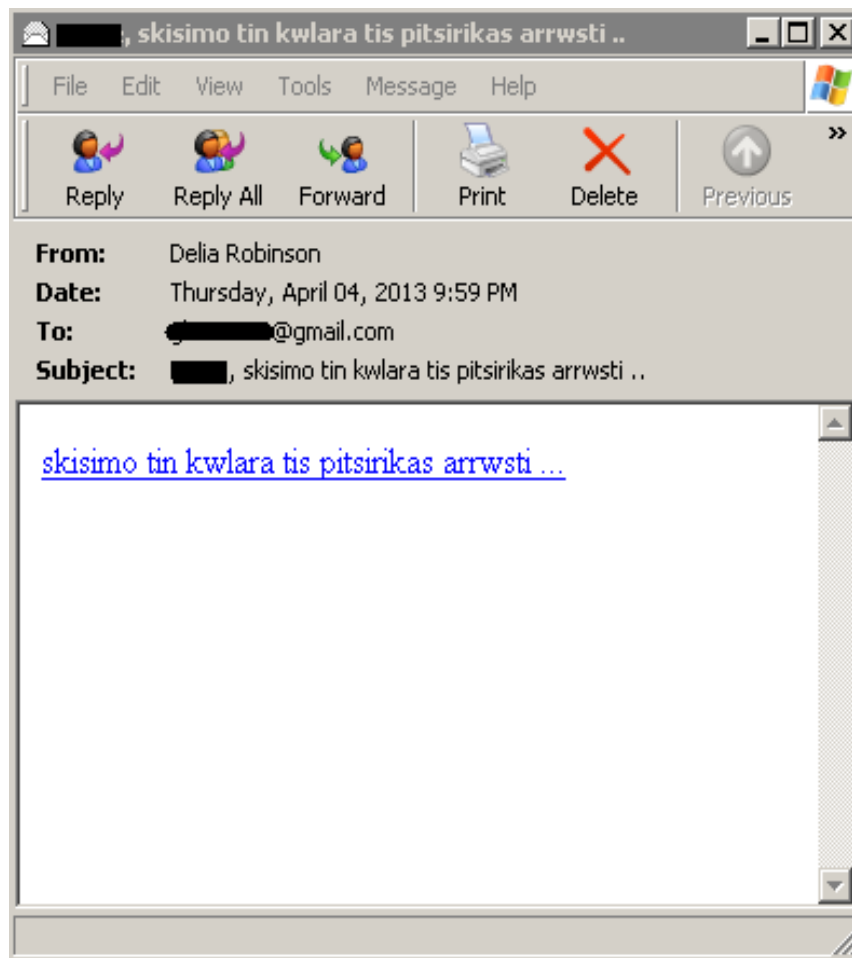

Now bearded nomads solicited our attention in pleading voices, pointing out the attractions: pots, piles of dried sheet chips for the barbecue.

"Blow it out your rocket tubes!" Steengo said, blowing his fingers through his grey hair, perhaps to see if it was still there. I would have nodded agreement with him, but only my head hurt too much.
